

EUROPEAN/NATIVE AMERICAN ENCOUNTER/CLASH

Why did the Native Americans and the Europeans Clash?

Native Americans lived in the Americas long before Europeans, including the Pilgrims, arrived. Early Native Americans believed that all people shared the land. Europeans, however, believed that individuals owned the land. Tribes were forced to move from the land where they had lived for generations. Spanish explorers stole gold from the Native Americans. In addition, millions of Native Americans died from diseases like measles and smallpox that had been brought to the New World by European settlers.

PREVIEW

Had the

Please Sign In or Sign Up to download the printable version of this worksheet s?

Native Americans. The Pilgrims, including the Powhatan and the Wampanoags saved the Pilgrims at Plymouth. During the 1800's, Sacajawea, a Shoshone woman, became a guide and translator for Lewis and Clark as they explored the Louisiana Territory.

NEWPATH
LEARNING

What was the Trail of Tears?

The Cherokee Indians first lived in Virginia, Georgia, and the Carolinas. European settlers, however, wanted Native American lands, so the Native Americans were forced to move. The Indian Removal Act forced the Cherokees and other tribes from their lands. Even though the Supreme Court declared the Indian Removal Act unconstitutional, President Andrew Jackson ignored the ruling of the Supreme Court and forced the Cherokees off of their land. The Cherokees had to move to Oklahoma. The routes along which the Cherokees were forced to move came to be called the Trail of Tears. Thousands of Cherokees died from hunger, the cold and diseases during this relocation process.

PREVIEW

Please Sign In or Sign Up to download the printable version of this worksheet

